

Crops are grouped and analyzed based on seasonal environmental conditions such as temperature, humidity, and rainfall. This process helps identify suitable crops for summer, winter, and rainy seasons to improve prediction accuracy and generate season-based agricultural recommendations.